Factsheet: The French Senate

1. At a glance

France is a semi-presidential Republic and a parliamentary democracy. The Senate is the upper House of the French Parliament, according to the bicameralism system, and it holds the legislative power together with the National Assembly. Under article 24 of the Constitution of the Fifth Republic, it represents the local and regional authorities. Its premises are the Luxembourg Palace in Paris.

When passing a law and in the event of divergent positions between the Senate and the National Assembly, the Prime Minister may give the last say to the Assembly. The latter can therefore legislate only with the agreement of the Senate or the Prime Minister, but never alone. The Senate, which has 348 Senators since the renewal of 2011, has undergone several reforms in its mode of election. Since the adoption of the Act 2003-697 of 30 July 2003, the mandate of the Senate is for six years, and renewal is done by half every three years. Senators are elected on the basis of indirect universal suffrage by 150 000 grand electors. The scrutiny is proportional (52 %), or uninominal in two rounds (48 %) at French departments' level.

The upper chamber is dominated by the right and centre since the beginning of the Fifth Republic with the exception of the 2011-2014 period.
