Factsheet: House of Representatives of Cyprus

1. At a glance

Cyprus has a presidential system of government where the President is elected directly by the citizens every five years. At the same time, the Cypriot Parliament - referred to as the House of Representatives - is elected in separate elections, also held every five years (but in different years).

The House of Representatives is composed of 56 Members coming from the Greek Cypriot community. Another 24 seats are reserved for Members coming from the Turkish Cypriot community but, due to the political situation on the island, are currently vacant. In addition, there are three observer members representing the Armenian, Latin and Maronite minorities. Voting for national parliamentary elections is compulsory.

The main functions of the Parliament are to vote on legislation (which can be introduced by Government ministers, individual Members or political groups in the Parliament) and on the budget, as well as to exercise control over the activities of the Government.
