Factsheet: The Portuguese Parliament

1. At a glance

Portugal is a semi-Presidential Republic and a parliamentary democracy.

The Assembly of the Republic (Assembleia da República) is the Parliament of Portugal. According to the Portuguese Constitution, the unicameral Assembly "is the representative assembly of all Portuguese citizens" The constitution names the Assembly as one of the country's organs of supreme authority.

The Assembly is made up of 230 Members. Members are elected from lists that parties or coalitions of parties put forward in each constituency. Votes are converted into seats using the proportional representation system and d'Hondt's highest-average rule. Each Member represents the whole country and not just the citizens from the constituency for which he or she was elected. Their term of office is four years, which corresponds to the duration of one legislature.

Each parliamentary year is known as a legislative session, and starts on 15 September. Members' terms of office only end the first time the Assembly sits after new elections have been held.

Following parliamentary elections on 9 October 2019, the Socialist Party (PS, S&D) won with almost 37% of the votes and gained 106 seats, a gain of 20 compared with 2015.
