Factsheet: The Hellenic Parliament

1. At a glance

Greece is a parliamentary democracy. The Hellenic Parliament is comprised of 300 Members who are directly elected by the citizens under a combination of voting systems. Voting in Greece is compulsory.

The main functions of the Parliament are to vote on legislation (which can be introduced by Government ministers, individual Members or political groups in the Parliament, in accordance with the constitution) and to exercise democratic control over the activities of the Government and other state agencies.

Elections normally take place every four years, but early elections may be called by the Prime Minister at any time. Early elections are also foreseen by the Constitution in the case of loss of confidence to the Government following a relevant vote in Parliament, or in the case of inability to elect the President of the Republic. Following the elections on 20 September 2015, SYRIZA (GUE/NGL) was re-elected as the largest party and continued its coalition government with the Independent Greeks (no affiliation in the EP) under Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras.
