Factsheet: The Swedish Riksdag

Riksdaghuset, Stockholm

1. At a glance

Sweden is a Constitutional Monarchy and a parliamentary democracy. The Riksdag is a unicameral Parliament composed of 349 Members elected by proportional representation.

The Riksdag is the supreme decision-making assembly in Sweden. It adopts legislation either in the form of a Government bill or in the form of a private member's motion from one or several members of the Riksdag. All legislative proposals are first considered by a committee before the Riksdag takes a decision. The Riksdag is responsible for determining central government expenditure and revenue. It does this after the Government has submitted proposals in the Budget Bill. The Riksdag examines the work of the Government and of public agencies. The Government cannot promote any EU policies without the support of the Riksdag.

The Riksdag's and Government's work with EU issues is carried out in various forums including the Chamber of the Riksdag, the parliamentary committees and the Committee on EU Affairs. The Riksdag draws up Sweden's foreign policy together with the Government. The Advisory Council on Foreign Affairs is a body for consultation on foreign affairs between the Government and the Riksdag. Areas of foreign policy that are determined by the Riksdag include what countries Sweden is to deploy peacekeeping forces to and what proportion of gross national income is to be spent on development assistance.
